Congressional Debate

Online Expectations

Congress is, by its nature, a group activity. Students will be expected to come ready to learn and do research. The good thing is all the research that we will be doing is going to be used in the upcoming competition season! Congressional Debate students will need to do research on a set docket that will be given out before camp begins. It would be a wise idea to familiarize yourself with the generalities of the pieces of legislation we are going to work on before camp. Everyone will be expected to come prepared and ready each day. There will be some "homework" assignments that are given to make the best use of our time. Students should be always involved and keep cameras on.

Participants will benefit from:

• Live lectures taught by Brian Alford and award-winning junior staff
• Personalized coaching feedback from one-on-one training sessions
• Explorative learning during office hours led by lab leaders
• Head start with research and speech prep for the fall TFA Congress docket
• Training on the fundamentals of being a Presiding Officer

Director's Statement

Welcome to the world of Congressional Debate! Congressional debate takes aspects of both public speaking and debate and joins them with parliamentary procedure to give us a real-world applicable event. Congressional debate involves researching, critical thinking, analysis, and a knowledge of the world around you. Through congress, you will explore many different and unique aspects of a topic in a fast-paced, group environment. Whether you are new to the activity or whether you have some experience, this camp will challenge you and get you well on the road to success in the upcoming TFA season.
I invite you to join us this summer and rethink the way you debate.
